The Evolution of the "Delphian"

Part 2

We ended with 1898 in the last issue of the "Quest", and now we skip to the year 1901. We do not have 1899 in our collection.

1901

The book size has changed again to a 7x9 3/4 and the cover design has changed as well. The pages are now numbered. There are 24 without the cover and ads. Two photographs are included. The first photograph again has no caption, however this time the young men and women pictured are listed with given names as well as surnames. The second photograph is of the Foot Ball team, and they are all dressed in suits. Again no caption but each individual is listed by given and surname.

Included also is a class prophecy written by Marie Merrick which is two and a half pages long. She begins...The dreary twilight was drawing to a close and the shadows of night were lengthening in the room, transforming familiar objects into grotesque goblins. I sat by the dying firelight dreamily musing on the past and probable future of the greatest Juniors, the Class of 1902, when suddenly on the side of the fireplace, loomed a tall figure clad in a flowing robe of pale gray, and on his brow in shining characters, I read, 1912" As I gazed, speechless, the apparition glided toward the window, beckoning me to follow, which I did without the slightest hesitation. We passed through the window and found ourselves in the National Capitol, standing in front of the White House. A light shone from the window of the President's private library, so, omitting the formality of knocking, we entered through the window and I recognized in the great man, the sole occupant of the room, my former classmate, Fred Morey, who began his presidential career in the High School. In this way she covers all of her classmates.

An article written by Cynthia A. Green "The Laboratory" tells of the lab, its location in the school and mentions that there was no elaborate memorial, but one may see on a window of the room probably the only record extant connected with its initial year. This consists of an artistic expression, for it is nothing less than an "etching" bearing the names of the first class in chemistry with the signature of their teacher and the date 1890. She writes further...But, although the establishment of the room attracted so little notice, nevertheless the event marked a distinct period in the history of the school and emphasized the wise foresight of the people of our city which is in keeping with the present trend of educational interests. She wrote that the Lab was furnished with equipment for the accommodation of ten pupils with a course in Chemistry covering twenty weeks. Little by little, as the work in the Scientific department has grown, greater requirements have been put upon the Laboratory. Forty weeks are now given to Chemistry and every necessary material is at hand to make the work thorough and practical. She states that special attention is given to doing the noted Harvard College preparatory experiments, with several others not directly connected. There is one high-power compound microscope and thirteen low-power botanical glasses, all of which, under favorable conditions, can be used for Botany and Physiology as well. She tells of a plan to enlarge the laboratory.

Once again, after reading some of the articles it is still my belief that the more things change the more they remain the same. An article written about the Gym states in part: "The gym has shown itself a decided benefit in more than one way, for besides improving the muscular development of those frequenting it, it furnishes a good moral place for boys to go, who might otherwise be in far worse places.

The "Delphian" 1907 once again changes its look and size. In this book the Editor -in-Chief and so forth were listed as they were in the 1901 book.

A paragraph in the editorial relates the classes' feelings regarding their "gym". It states: One thing we regret, with the entire student body, that is, the lack of a well equipped gymnasium and compulsory training in our schools. We are a city of 5,000 inhabitants, support six saloons and a sewer, and yet we appear to be unable to build or maintain any pretense of a "gym." We would suggest that a committee of investigation be appointed to determine the true cause of this neglect.

Another paragraph in the editorial reads: The Delphian is pleased to be able to praise the standard of our schools. Not the slightest doubt rests in any of our minds, regarding the raising of the quality of the work above that of preceding years. It is true that the mark required for passing was raised from 75 per cent to 80 per cent, many say to insure the schools remaining on the U. of M. certified list. But with the "goods which have been delivered this year," there is hardly any doubt but what that mark might again be lowered. These schools have the distinction of being the only schools in the county on the North Central Association accredited list.

This year the "Delphian" contains nine pictures. The students appearing in the pictures are named.

In 1907 the Public Schools of Charlotte occupied six separate buildings, known as the Longfellow, Hawthorne, Froebel, Washington, Grammar and High School. More than a thousand pupils were in attendance.

Another article entitled "Society" relates: The Juniors last year came very gracefully to the front and offered a "J" Hop which broke the monotonous round of school life. This was the first affair of its kind ever held in the High School's history. The Juniors of the year 1906 were the first to change the iron will of the School Board, and, after many heated arguments with the former Superintendent and the Faculty, the Juniors, through their untiring efforts, won their point. The Hop was a success, both financially and socially, nearly one hundred couples attending.

The students were listed as first, second, third and fourth year in this book.

The cover design and size once again changed for the 1908 Delphian. With every year it looks more professional. The book has grown to 74 pages. The seniors are listed near the front of the book and their are individual pictures of each with a little saying beneath each name. The class motto was "From School Life to Life's School"

Wow! Change again. Once again the front is completely different, a much larger design with color. There are only 38 pages.

The editorial this year again mentions that better exits from the upper floors is clearly as apparent now as in the past.

On the facing page of the Senior and Junior Roster is a page that makes you wonder. On this page there is a thin lined border with the following centered "In Memoriam" Anna Mae Lennon, April 12, 1893 - January 13, 1910.

In an article entitled "Good Citizenship", (by Elsie Cooper) she ends with, "It would be both impossible and unprofitable to enumerate the various problems - political, industrial, and social - which confront those who are entering upon their inheritance of citizenship this first quarter of the twentieth century. Never were conditions so complex, never was there greater need for honesty and clear thinking. No one ought to be at a loss to discover his particular task.

As I have stated earlier, the more things change the more they remain the same. History seems to repeat itself. What would these young boys and girls think if they could see us now!

Year books are a wonderful source. They tell us a great deal about an earlier time.

The "Delphian" School Year Books are just some of the year books that the Eaton County Genealogical Society has on their book shelves.

If you know of anyone who has year books that they wish to find a good home for, and where they will be cared for and used, remember us.

A Long Way From Home

May 15th, 1864

Port Hudson, Louisiana must have seemed a long way from home for William S. Trask on May 15, 1864. With modern travel calculating the quickest route by car it is 1,105 miles from Eaton Rapids, Michigan. I was quite sure they must have taken the train to Louisiana. However, during the Civil War there was not a railroad that went completely through from Michigan to Louisiana. Upon reading on I learned that they reached there destination by train and boat.

Contained in our vertical files we find an account of the Michigan 6th during the Civil War, written by William S. Trask while at Port Hudson, Louisiana.

He begins with: The Sixth are now encamped within the outer works of Port Hudson, under the rays of what, at home, would be considered an August sun. We are drilling in infantry tactics. He explains it is necessary for heavy artillery to know how to work every gun in the service.

Another paragraph begins: "That we are once more in the land of war and violence, the distant cracking of musketry and the boom of artillery which has startled us, as well as the smoke of burning buildings which still taints the morning air, bears witness.

After inspection was over, Orderly Brainard and William Trask started out to learn what they could of the late skirmish, and (as odd as it may seem he says to) enjoy a morning walk. They passed out through the sally port, past a guard, whose business it was to stop them, but he stated that they assumed all the dignity of authority, and they were let past unquestioned. During this walk they pushed on to where the cavalry and artillery were raising long lines of dust, and were soon on ground every foot of which was familiar to them as they had fought it over two or three times during the siege.

Nearly a mile below the works of Port Hudson, they came upon a place formerly known as Mt. Pleasant Landing, where an enterprising gentleman had planted a large field of cotton and constructed a fine sawmill. Trask says that of course this state of things did not meet the approbation of the chivalry and this morning's work had been a mark of their displeasure. I take it from this sentence that they had destroyed this gentleman's enterprise.

Passing up and down the river, Trask said that one could not help but remark of the romantic beauty of the spot. The mill was situated just where the green slopes of what had once been a ravine wind down through the high bluffs to the level of the river, and along the sides of this little glen was grouped the clustering cabins of a Negro village, as well as a small but neat dwelling of the proprietor. Trask continues to describe how the scene had looked a few days previous, but now where the little home was, all that remained were the hot embers of the still smoking ruin. At the foot of the slope a broad belt of smoke was rising from the yet burning mill, and among the huts groups of Negroes were gathered round the unburied dead.

Trask then goes on to tell of the history of the scene as he learned it: About a hundred men of Scott's rebel cavalry, with one piece of artillery, had, for a day or two, been hovering round the place. They had passed the night in a ravine, concealed from the eyes of our cavalry by the foliage which fringed its sides. Advancing at early light up this ravine they debouched upon the plateau on which the stockade stands, with pistol shot of the work. Here they divided into two parties, one of which advanced boldly and at a leisurely pace toward the stockade having in their front ranks a few of Uncle Sam's blue overcoats, while the other swept round the head of the ravine and advanced upon the dwelling to secure the proprietor, and to cut off the retreat of those who might think with Falstaff that "the better part of valor is discretion." Luckily, both the proprietor and his lady were absent at New Orleans.

On the present occasion the little fort was garrisoned by a Lieut. and 18 men of the corps d' Afrique. Of these it seems that 5 were on post; and the probability is that this constituted the majority of the men in the work at the time; since they admit that a part of them were washing at the river. The enemy advanced deliberately until halted by the guard and then dashed forward. It is evident that the party in the work fired; as one of the rebels, either through accident or design, was so badly wounded that he died before his comrades could get him off. It is equally evident that the commander acted with alacrity.

Trask then recounts more of the incident. After driving their captives 10 or 12 miles the enemy were obliged to abandon them and trust to speed for safety. The Proprietor's Clerk who had just returned from his witch like ride, gave a very graphic description of the rebel retreat.

The Clerk said, "for the first 4 or 5 miles we were allowed to jog along at a walk or trot, most of the enemy treating us very gentlemanly, though a few abused us. But, when they found that they were pursued, it was 'hurry up there you d--d son of a b--h or I'll shoot you!' Company B faced about to show fight and cover the retreat; but it was but a short time before they came thundering past as if the devil was after them.

A smart looking colored woman who had been left in charge of the house, and who had received a severe blow on the side of the head, told her story. (Her story is then given).

She ends with, "Just den de Yankees came up, and golly! I just rolled down de side o'de ravine under a log and de bullets dey was flying round awful thick, but I laid close and dy just done went and left me."

On the way back they passed the body of a contraband who had been shot while running for his life, and a little further on lay a white man, one of the employees in the mill. One could see by the scantiness of his dress that he had been awakened from his sleep by the assault, had fled for the Fort and been shot down within pistol shot of the works of Port Hudson. He lay upon his back as he had fallen, his black hair thrown back and his really handsome features turned up to the hot rays of the sun; yet wearing no traces of suffering. Who was he? I could not learn; but no doubt somewhere in the wide world there will be dim eyes and aching hearts for him.

One Negro soldier who had a part of the back of his skull pared off by a sabre stroke, says he was ordered to halt, and having done so, was told to lay down his gun. He complied. He was then ordered to approach his capturer, and obeying was sabred and left for dead.

As nearly as Trask could learn the loss on both sides is as follows: Three of the enemy killed. The number of their wounded unknown. Two white men who had been employed in the mill were killed and another mortally wounded. Two contrabands and two Negro soldiers were killed, three wounded and their Lieutenant taken prisoner.

Trask then relates how his walk ended. They stopped and partook of an excellent dinner with the Surgeons of the Sixth, Messrs. Mottram, Mason and Chase, who have ever contrived to make their hospital the pride of the Reg., as it has certainly been the envy of all the medical gentlemen of neighboring regiments. all the men of Co. H. who were here were getting along finely. Trask said he was sorry to say that when he left New Orleans for this place, they were obliged to leave Lieut. James B. Brainard at the Hotel Dieu, one of the best hospitals in the city, he lay ill of lung fever.

Trask ends with a P.S. May 17th, 1864. Since this was written we have received word that Lieut. Brainard was some better. The Regt. is now encamped inside of the new work. Inside the same vertical file is Memorial Address by Capt. W.S. Trask, of Charlotte on Decoration day, May 30, 1879.

He begins with he was formerly associated with your dear boys through years of hardship and trial, rather than that you have expected that I should highly entertain you; for one might export coals to New Castle with as much propriety, as to import speakers to Eaton Rapids, the home of so many able and eloquent members of the bar and no less eloquent and devoted ministers of the gospel. But whatever are the causes that have lead you to honor me with the invitation to say something of our noble dead and of Co. H. - your first representatives in the field - I am indeed glad of the opportunity; for, if there is one duty dearer to me than all others, it is to pay that tribute of respect to my dead comrades which all nations from the remotest antiquity have seen fit to accord to their fallen heroes.

In part Capt. Trask says, "But with what feelings - what honor - what tears ought we to come to the graves of the 'brave unfortunate' who in the hey-day of existence gave up their lives in the service of their country, in vindication of its honor and in the cause of human liberty; especially when many of us who have gathered here to pay this tribute of respect are their comrades, who trod with them the wine-press of battle, and who slept side by side with them upon the field of strife, tented by the stars, as we shall one day be sleeping under the same green covering which we, today, have decorated with flowers.

What a day is this for memories? Who is there who cannot recall these pictures of the past, when, at the call of their country, went out from among you the young, the talented, the brave, to throw themselves into that chasm from which it was certain that but few would return scathless, if with life. And, alas! to how many of your homes did the gaunt specter of war come in and sit at your firesides, first as a dark foreboding, and then as a dread reality, as you learned that your boy, your son, your husband or your brother was the one who should come back no more forever.

Be we who marched with them have other and later memories-pictured scenes in the story of their lives on which you have never look, but in which you, none the less, have an interest, since the actors in those scenes were the friends and relatives with whom you had parted. And it is one of the duties of the hour to recall the remembrance of those dear ones and place before you as briefly as possible, some of those scenes, however dimmed they may be by the years that have intervened. Of course, in the varied scenes of army life extended over four years, most of which was spent in the extreme South, where disease ran riot, it is impossible to recall many of the associations-many of the incidents themselves, which we should be glad to place before you, did time and circumstances permit.

As is customary in the army, as fast as the men become sick they were sent to the regimental hospital and while they remained there I used to make it my duty to visit them frequently; and I retain the memory of more than one grateful glance of the eye, thankful word or kindly pressure of the feeble hand, which I need not tell you was ample compensation then, and more than a compensation now. Nothing did the sick boys so much good as to know that some of their comrades cared for them unless it was a letter from home, or, better still, a box of good things such as a mother knows how to put up for the absent loved one. But soon as the regiment received marching orders the sick were sent to the general hospital; and thus it was that many a poor fellow died not only far from home, but far from his regiment, and among strangers.

Our lot was cast for the most of the time in the Department of the Gulf; and this fact determined the fate of many of your sons; for being so far from home it was an almost hopeless task for even a moderately sick man to undertake the journey. Until the fall of Vicksburg, you, who used to receive letters from us, will remember that they came directed by the way of New York. With a thousand miles of ocean travel and another thousand of railroading intervening between himself and home, what wonder that many a soldier spent the last feeble remnant of life in a futile effort to reach it, and died and was buried none of us know where or how? I hoped to see one here to-day, who by sheer force of will for muscle and health were wanting, by husbanding his little store of strength as a man husbands his last drop of water in a desert, was just able to reach the friendly portal, bankrupt in health, bankrupt in strength, and only holding onto life by a feeble tenure. I speak of Geo. C. Perrine. His companion of the voyage James Mann, died in Marshall, almost home; yet separated from it by death and the grave.

I would like to mention by name and recount some incident in connection with each of the dead comrades of Co. H., from this part of the country, and this I will do as far as I am able, lamenting that my knowledge and my memory of the facts are so often at fault.

The first whom I shall recall, doubtless many of you will remember. Oliver Kinne. He was one of those companionable and noble fellows who make friends everywhere. He was handsome, manly, a good soldier, a true friend and a devoted lover. When he enlisted he was still sitting under the shadow of great a sorrow, he was still mourning for the loss of his wife, who seems to have been the guiding star of his existence. I never knew him until after his loss; but I was told that he was never quite his former self again. I could not help loving him for his constancy and devotion to her memory; and when on board the Laurel Hill, I took his parched hand in mine for the last time, and watched him panting out his life under the consuming fires of a fever, and he said he was willing to die. I knew it was the hope of meeting her that made death almost welcome. Above and back of Baton rouge there is a graveyard formerly used by the U.S. troops stationed at that post. It is there that Kinne is buried, and I carved his name, together with the square and compass, on the head-board that marked his grave. That little grave-yard grew rapidly while we were there, and it was there that many of the boys of Co. H. found their last resting place.

Royal H. King was another you will remember well. I recall him as a handsome, manly, frank-eyed soldier. He too sleeps at Baton rouge. His brother, John W. King, a small quiet-mannered young man, with more than the ordinary share of good looks, enlisted and joined the company something like a year or more after the death of Royal; and though the regiment was constantly shifting its location and was never again stationed at Baton Rouge, in the fortunes of war he found a grave in the same cemetery with his brother.

Myron E. Bateman I remember talking with but a few days before his death. He was sitting on the side of his bed, and, if I remember correctly, expressed himself as confident of getting well. A day or more and he was dead. He was sitting on the side of the bed, as I had seen him, when death overtook him. He fell suddenly from where he was seated, and when they raised him up all was over. These were the days of sudden deaths. Francis Ploof had been sick for a few days in his quarters, disliking, as did many of the men, to go to the hospital. He was not supposed to be seriously ill, but he died during the night, and none of those lying near him knew of it till morning.

Henry N. Blodgett, our genial wide-awake drummer boy, myself and the sons of A. H. Brainerd, all soldiers, lowered into his last resting place in your cemetery when we were home on veteran furlough in the spring of sixty-four.

Elmore D. Ryan, was a good soldier. I saw him last in the hospital at Camp Williams above New Orleans, and it was there he died. Although quite a young man, he had left behind him when he went to the war, a well beloved and, doubtless, a very lovable girl, to whom he was engaged. For her sake he had kept an elaborate diary of events in which he had mingled with many shrewd observations of men and things the most tender thoughts of her. It was a neatly written and well composed paper, and was every way complimentary to the head and heart of the writer. His effects I sent to his parents, but this with some of the things most appropriate as keepsakes I sent to her, and received in acknowledgement one of the most grateful and womanly letters that has ever come into my hands.

John Flanders was one of those who died on the way home. He expired on board the steamer "Continental" en route for St. Louis.

Odin Mahan died at New Orleans, and though I remember his brothers well, I am sorry to say I am able to recall but little in regard to him. I think it must be that he died soon after joining the regiment.

Rhomine Stowell was one of those who joined the regiment after the war was nearly over. And yet disease, that always kills more than the bullet, assigned him a grave at Fort Gaines, Ala. I remember him as a promising young man and a good penman.

David M. Huckins, I think was also buried at Fort Gaines. His health seemed to have been poor the greater part of the time he was with us.

Robert St. Clair, was one of those who was with us from the first. he was a man of iron constitution, and a good soldier. He afterwards enlisted in the regular army. During the siege of Port Hudson he sustained a violent attack of fever which he only survived with shattered health. He visited the company a short time afterward, the mere wreck of his former self. He went back to his battery, and shortly after I learned that he was dead.

Geo. Bennett, another man who left our company to join the regular service, never lived to get home. While with us he was a good and reliable soldier.

Guy Booth, I remember well. He was an active and faithful soldier. He lived to return home, but did not survive, and his grave is among those that have been decorated today.

Henry Watters, was another who lived to return; but soon found a grave in your cemetery. I remember him as a tall good-looking young man with a beautiful head of dark wavy hair. I was glad to be able to visit his grave and pay him the tribute of respect due from every soldier to a dead comrade.

Schuyler Perrine, was another from your midst whom, no doubt many of you will remember. He was a man of kindly heart, and made an excellent soldier. He died at Port Hudson.

Get. Lindsley, died at Ship Island, and I remember no burial that impressed me so mournfully as did his. He was the only one of our company buried at that place, and the lone grave in the shifting sands of the island, with no verdure but the tufts of coarse grass that here and there make an effort to clothe the bleak sand-drifts, with no outlook but over the restless waters of the ocean, with no sounds of nature but the sighing of the wind or the ceaseless roar of the surges, seemed to me the very type of loneliness and desolation.

Chas. B. Darken, died at Carrollton, above New Orleans. I remember talking with him not long prior to this death. He was able to be about and his appearance did not betray any marked signs of coming dissolution, unless it might be that his dark eyes were unusually bright; yet in a short time he was dead.

William Coleman, Chas. Gillett, William Johnson and Andres Knapp are all names that have left no distinctive memories in connection with their career as soldiers; and yet they were every way worthy of remembrance, having sealed their devotion to their country with their lives.

Steven L. Roe, was a mere boy when he came to the regiment, but he gained rapidly in manly and soldierly qualities after I first saw him. He, too, died at Fort Gaines.

There is one I would not forget though he did not belong to Co. H. I speak of Japhet Laton. He was a true friend and a firm and conscientious soldier. I saw him last as he lay on his blanket in the dust under the shelter of an old gin house. It was at the close of that bloody and disastrous charge of the 27th of May, 1863, at Port Hudson. He was breathing heavily, for he was shot through the lungs. He wished me to have the surgeons do something for him, and I was indignant that it had not already been done. He asked me how the battle had gone; and I remember it almost choked me to tell him that we were badly cut to pieces. It might have been some consolation to a dying man to know that he had helped to purchase victory with his life; but to learn that he had flung it away for nothing was hard. I saw the surgeons, and there were five or six of them working rapidly and skillfully as only army surgeons can work. The pile of amputate limbs by the side of their table was growing steadily larger, and all the earthen floor of the extemporized hospital was strewn with the bleeding, groaning and dying forms of men, many of whom I knew. My request was listened to politely, and the surgeons promised to see him at the earliest opportunity. This they did, and I learned that they had seen him already, and had done nothing, for the reason that the case was hopeless. They said he could only live a few hours at most. I made him as comfortable as possible and left him, to return early in the morning; but he was already dead and buried. His grave was pointed out to me, but a few feet from the building where he died.

You have all, doubtless, visited, today the grave of Lieut. Jas B. Brainerd, and no one who lived in Eaton Rapids in the spring of 1861 could fail to have known and liked the manly and open-hearted boy, who during his three years of service, developed into an engaging, resolute and daring officer. He was long and closely united with the fortunes of Co. H. You could only have known him as a young man just on the threshold of life. We, who knew him through those latest and best three years of his career, watched the unfolding of his character with brotherly interest, and know as you could not have known, how much of promise went down to the grave in his early death. Jim, as we loved to call him, was the gayest among the gay, and I shall never forget the shouts of laughter and wild merriment of the frolic carried on by himself and two or three of the younger officers in the cabin of the steamer as we approached New Orleans on our return to the South. It was a scuffle in which the whole party put forth their utmost strength and, all aglow with the excitement and exertion, he was attacked with a violent fever. The next morning it was known that he was dangerously ill; and his brothers took him to the Hotel Dieu, as the one place in the great city where his chances of recovery would be the best. Here, while we went up the river to Port Hudson, he fought out a desperate fight with his disease. I visited him in company with Will his brother, a few weeks later, when seemed to be recovering. He shed tears at the sight of us, and said by way of apology that he could not help it, as if tears were unworthy a soldier. But I tell you that the most heroic men I have ever known were men of tender feelings and gentle sympathies; and it is indeed true, "the loving are the daring." He told us how fearfully near he had come to dying and when we left, he insisted on accompanying us as far as the porch. The last I ever saw of him was, as we looked back on our way to the up-river steamer. He stood supporting himself by one of the pillars, watching us with his large, hollow eyes as we disappeared from sight. It was a lively day in May, not far from this time in the month, fifteen years ago. We left with high hopes of his speedy recovery, and every member of the company felt the loss, when a little more than a week later we learned that he was dead. The sweet May-day, the evergreens and flowers are all fitting memorials of him; and we can only echo the sentiment of the poet. "Light be the turf of thy tomb: May its verdure like emeralds be: There should not be shadow of gloom, In aught that reminds us of thee."

Capt. Trask ends with in part with If any have been omitted it has been for want of knowledge of where they were from; for, remember, this is but a fragment of the death roll of Co. H., which has left a chain of silent sentinels almost around the entire confederacy.

I hope you take the time to read "Far From Home". Hopefully someone might find a relative among the names, but even if none of you did, this will give you an insight into how one of your Civil War relatives might have lived.

I was amazed to find a Memorial Address from 1879. Perhaps my ignorance is showing, but I thought that Memorial Day wasn't recognized until later years, not as early as just shortly after the Civil War.

Miscellaneous Items.

LARCENY.—On Wednesday evening last some thief crawled into the window of Mr. Rufus Bigelow's horse barn and stole several dollars worth of such articles as he could conveniently carry off; such as horse blankets, portions of a harness, a whip, brush, oil cloth &c. Our community has long been infested with a gang of the smallest and meanest kind of thieves, who have been in the habit of robbing clotheslines, pork barrels and smoke houses. Cowardice is all that keeps them from stealing horses and breaking into stores, but success will soon embolden them. Public suspicion has long been resting upon certain individuals, who imagine they are yet passing themselves off as honest men.

COAL AT LANSING.—Mr. Silas E. Millett has deposited in the Lansing Journal office several specimens of coal of a superior quality, taken from his farm in the township of Delta, about four miles up the Grand River from Lansing.

In the explorations that have hitherto been made there is not the slightest doubt but that coal is there deposited in extensive quantities. Mr. M. purposes to make more extensive investigation, and operations immediately. Between the strata of coal is deposited the purest clay, which is now being used in manufacturing an excellent article of stone-ware.

Mr. Millett has presented us with a specimen of the above mentioned coal. To the eye it is as handsome coal as we ever saw. It is clear and glossy, entirely free from sulphur and burns very readily. We shall publish more in regard to this hereafter.

Jean M. White sent a copy of her grandfather's autograph album, which included signatures of people in and around the near by Eaton County area. The following is just a few of the lines written in Wesley Grayburn's autograph album, however, every name who did write in the autograph album is included, and if any of you recognize any of the names you can read what they wrote here in the genealogy room, and or write to Jean, P.O. Box 11348, Glendale, AZ 85318-1348, with any information you may have.

To Wesley
Thould the woves of troble beat loud and awful at your feet on Gods word if you would rely
He will guide you with his eye
Your Mother (Clarissa Louisa "Lou" (Cranson) Grayburn)

Wesley
Love is blind but love can see
There is plenty of room for two
In one small chair,
If you sit with care,
And stick as tight as glue.
Your schoolmate, Lottie Norman

Dear Friend
Remember me when far away
Half awake and half asleep;
Remember me on your wedding day,
And send a slice of cake.
Your's truly, Bessie Payne

"Generation Gaps"

by Lois Wallace Fenske

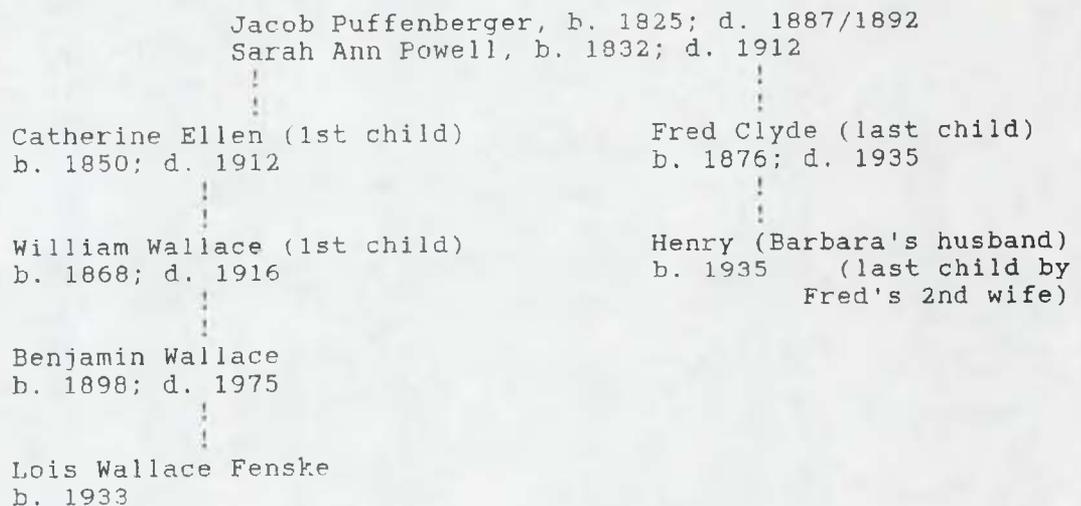

Barbara Puffenberger's husband and I are both descendents of Jacob and Sarah Ann (Powell) Puffenberger who came to Eaton County in the 1860's from Seneca County, Ohio. Barbara and I "met" through the Eaton County Genealogical Society.

Having been involved in genealogical research for over thirty years, I thought I knew what to look for and how to piece together information. For example, it is quite often assumed that people of an approximate same age will be in the same generation down from a common ancestor. It was with absolute surprise that I discovered differently in dealing with the Puffenbergers.

When Barbara Puffenberger first wrote to me, she said her husband was the grandson of Jacob and Sarah Ann (Powell) Puffenberger. I wrote back saying did she mean that her husband was the great-great grandson of Jacob and Sarah. She assured me that he was the grandson. (I am the great-great granddaughter of Jacob and Sarah, and yet I am a few years older than her husband.)

My five generations coincide with his three generations. This is the widest spread in years I have ever come across in my genealogical research. It has reminded me not to assume anything.

Letter from the Editor

They say that time flies when you are having fun. Time flies no matter what, the older you get. When we wrapped up the April-June Quest, I thought for sure we would leisurely put together the July-Sept. Quest. Foolish me! If it were not for the great help I receive from Drouscella, ... who knows what. I consider her a Co-editor.

From reading the last Quest, you wouldn't think I work for a paper. Ok so it is a shopping guide, with news of the greater Eaton Rapids and surrounding areas, but we try to be error free. Hopefully, I'll have fewer errors this time, I certainly hope so. I have already found a few. Drouscella has accepted the proof reading job along with her other duties for our next issue.

We received many 3x5 cards with the surnames our members are researching, which we have put on file. Hopefully those of you who have not yet done so will take a few moments and send in your surnames. Who knows who will come in and discover that you are related to their line, and fill in some blank spaces for you.

Sheila Mott continues to enter information into our computer from our surname files. Eventually this will be very helpful to all researchers who use our facility. I don't know how she does it! I would feel like it was a hopeless task, there are so many cards of information yet to be done. So far she has entered 18,766. I've penciled this in so you have the latest figure.

We still need volunteers to staff the room. It is great fun to help someone find information, and it is a time you can use to do some research if visitors and members don't need help. Think about it. If everyone who could volunteer, did, no one person would get worn out.

Sincerely,

Barbara Green Puffenberger

PS: We still need recipes for our cookbook. They need not be an old family recipes, but a favorite of yours. Won't you please help us out?

Sarah "Sally" Searls

First woman resident of Charlotte

Mrs. Sally Searls was the youngest of eight children born to Alvin and Wealthy (Austin) Burt. Sally was born near Salem, Massachusetts on 21-MAY-1797 and died on March 30th, 1877. At six years of age Sally's parents moved to the Holland Purchase, which is twenty miles east of Buffalo, NY. Sally was just seventeen years old when she married Jonathan Searls on May 24, 1814.

Jonathan was the son of Samuel Searls, Sr. and was born on 01-MAY-1791 in New York. Jonathan belonged to the Volunteer Army of 1812. Her husband was wounded in Kingston during some "irregular warfare" with the Indians.

Jonathan, his brothers Samuel and Stephen their half-brother Allen and a nephew with the surname of Parish came and settled in this county in October, 1835. They worked five days cutting a track and then hired a team to bring Mrs. Jonathan Searls and their household goods through. The nearest neighbor was eight miles away.

Jonathan was the first postmaster of Eaton County. Sally is considered to be the first female settler in Eaton County. As the Searl's family were one of the first settlers, their home was also used as the local church, courthouse and tavern.

Jonathan left his home on December 18, 1841 in good health and was found dead shortly thereafter. Mr. Searl's was buried on the family farm.
